“Jane’s mother was not well last week and so Jane was helping her to run the house. Every day she did the shopping, the cooking and errands for her mother. One day she had to go to the cleaners and collect some clothes which had been cleaned. Afterwards she went to Boots where her mother had asked her to buy some medicine, and she was just coming out when she ran into Martin, one of her schoolmates. She had not seen him for a few days because he had been absent from school, so she asked him how he was, adding she had heard he was ill. Martin explained he had had an awful cold, but added he was all right now. Jane said he looked ok. Then Martin said he had heard that Glenda was not well, and asked what was wrong with her. Jane looked embarrassed and answered Glenda had been knocked down by a motorbike. Martin said he was sorry to hear that and enquired how it had happened”.

"Peter and Jhon are changing classrooms between lessons. They have just finished their maths lesson and are now going to the chemistry laboratory. The corridors are full of chatting boys and girls, all changing classrooms. Peter and John reach the lab and are met by a group of students just coming out holding their noses and laughing. Beyond them, in the lab, there is a cloud of yellow smoke and the sound of people coughing; the chemistry teacher appears in the doorway looking rather upset and tells them to wait outside until he has aired the room. An experiment must have done wrong. Peter and John sit down on the window sill in the corridor telling jokes while they wait for the chemistry lab to return to normal."

"This morning I got up early and had my usual breakfast: eggs and bacon, toast and butter, two cups of tea. Although the weather was not very nice. I thought I would go for a walk; a breath of fresh air always does you good. After half an hour I found I had a bar of chocolate in my pocket, and I ate it. Then, as I was near my friend Ken's house, I decided to go and say hello to him. I was about to ring the bell, when I heard a voice behind me; it was Ken coming back from the newsagent's where he had bought the new "Melody Maker", his favourite magazine. I asked him how he was, and he said he thought he had a cold and he was going to bed. Then I said goodbye to him, adding I would telephone in the evening to ask how he felt. When I got back home my stomach felt funny, so I realized I was hungry and had a snack while I read the newspaper."

"Stuart Comfort is a boy of 17; he is 5 feet 6 inches tall and rather thin; he has sandy hair, a long nose, and large ears. His hands and feet are fairly big. He is dark-eyed and wears glasses because he is short-sighted; he is trying to grow a beard. He is usually quite a nice boy, kind and helpful, but he is quick-tempered, and when his friends tease him he turns red and gets very cross indeed. That is why people consider him a bit touchy sometimes. Stuart lives in a semi-detached house in the centre of the town and attends a comprehensive school. He is in B stream because he manages fairly well in all subjects; he is also very good at games. Hazel Pearce is one of Stuart's friend. She is tall and fair-haired, with grey, dreamy eyes and a lovely smile. She is very proud of her long, beautiful legs, and therefore she usually wears short skirts."

"It was a chilly, wet night. Police Inspector Hound wrapped his mackintosh round himself in a useless attempt to shelter himself from the rain. He had spent days and days looking for a certain man he suspected of murder, but so far the man had managed to escape him. Now Hound was waiting behind the corner of a pub where the suspect was known to appear every now and then. The inspector was very tired, and above all very hungry, for he hadn't had any supper. Waiting any longer seemed useless, and he was about to give up and go home when a shadow was near enough, then came out of this hiding-place and looked into the man's face: it was the man he wanted!. The man saw he was caught, pulled out a gun and tried to shoot, but Hound was too fast for him and hit him straight on the jaw".

"What is science? One may say it is a method whose various stages of observation, hypothesis and experiment are repeated again and again. Failures are frequent and success is rare; weariness and disappointment are commonplace in scientific work. There is no room for the easy-going worker in science, precise-ness must be the scientist's focus, the observation he carries out must be attentive, the experiment accurate, the hypothesis well-founded. There are endlessly long months of boring routine, during which only occasional moments of success encourage the scientist.

However, it should not be thought that this method is followed only by those whom we commonly call "scientists"; the same method is used by other researchers in a way appropriate to their own particular field.

"Paul had not seen David for several days and so he went round to his house one evening. He was very surprised to see him holding a guitar, which he was trying to play; Paul wondered where it came from. David explained that although he was broke he had just bought it with some money he had borrowed from George. Paul wanted to know why he had bought it, as he knew David had always hated music; David answered he had changed his mind. Paul said that everybody knew David could not tell one note from another, but David insisted he would learn to play and sing, adding he was sure he could. Paul told him to be reasonable, pointing out he did not have an ear for music, and advised him to give up trying. David insisted he would learn; all he needed was more practice, he said."

"Bess and Ann are going shopping. It is the beginning of summer, and the new summer models have just arrived. The girls want to get some new clothes, so having obtained some money from their respective fathers (although not as much as they wanted) they set out for the shopping centre. Now they are walking through the arcade looking at the shop windows. Among other things Ann needs a new skirt, and she sees one she likes. They enter the clothes shop to have a closer look at the skirt she has seen and some other models. Ann has finished buying the skirt. She is very pleased with it because it cost less than she expected to pay. Her friend Bess could not find a skirt she liked, but then she saw a beautiful green blouse she fell in love with. However, it was too small, and she was terribly disappointed."

"A few days ago Ann and Bess, a friend of hers, asked their fathers for some money because they needed new clothes for the summer. They caught a bus to the shopping centre, and when they got there they started looking around the windows of several shops. In one of these Ann saw a skirt she thought she liked, so they went in to have a closer look. Bess however said she did not like that model, and suggested that another one she had just seen was much better. Ann did not know what to do at first because she liked them both, but when Bess pointed out that the model of the second one was more original and the colour was nicer she decided to follow Bess's advice and buy it. After that they left the shop and had a look round for some more things; Bess saw a blouse she liked very much, and was terribly disappointed when she found they did not have the right size."
